GUILD'S SIGNAL.

By MISS LANCE.

Two long whistles, faint and clear,

That was the signal that Guild, the said—

Gave to his wife at Providence,

As through the sleeping town, and thence,

Out in the night,

On to the light,

Down past the farms, lying white, he sped!

As a husband's greeting, scant no doubt,

Yet to the woman looking out,

Watching and waiting, no serene,

Dove song or midnight melody

Said what that whistle seemed to say:

"To my true trust

So love to you

Working or waiting, Good night!" it said.

Brick young ladies, tourists fine,

Old commuters along the line,

Brakemen and porters glanced ahead

Shook at the signal, sharp, intense,

Pierced through the shadows of Providence—

"Nothing at all,

Nothing at all,

Only Guild calling his wife," they said.

Summer and Winter, the old refrain

Flag o'er the billows of rippling grain,

Pierced through the building boughs overhead,

Flow down the track when the red leaves burned

Life living oaks from the engine spurred;

"To our true trust,

First on all Duty—Good night," it said.

And then one night it was heard no more,

From Nottingham over Rhode Island shore,

And the folk in Providence said and said,

As they turned in their beds, "The engineer

Has once forgotten his midnight cheer."

One only knew

To his true trust

Guild lay under his engine, dead.

The Terrace Balcony.

BY J. C. KUMER.

We may consider as garden terraces those long, low balconies extending if not all along the front of the house, at least for a substantial distance to admit of our gardening there in a far less confined space than in the mere veranda of a window. Access to such balconies being had through windows opening down to the floor before each window, an interval should be reserved to allow one to approach the balustrade and lean one's elbow whilst looking out.

Should it be your good fortune to occupy a lodging chamber at once healthy and agreeable, such an appendage as a spacious balcony with a good exposure, the side spaces in the middle of the balcony in front of the windows may be supplied with wooden boxes longer than they are wide, painted green or ornamented with rustic work and filled with good garden earth, well mixed with manure. You have but to consider these boxes as the borders of a parterre, and proceed to garden there, accordingly as you would on the ground.

Plans for The Terrace Balcony.—Wisteria and Virginia Creeper. At each end of the balcony, a box, its length equal to the width of the balcony; with two boxes have a special destination; it is there that you must plant a glycine of China, (Wisteria Sinensis) and a Bignonia, or Virginia Creeper, (Trumpet flower), the running stems of which are to be trained parallel to each other along the balustrade. Thus without encumbering the balcony you will have in the spring, the beautiful bunches of amethyst flowers of the Wisteria hanging gracefully outside and shedding an odor the most delicately sweet of almost any of the whole flower kingdom, and in autumn, the flowers of the Virginia Creeper, in bunches of rich scarlet, will renew the decoration. During the intermediate heats the abundant foliage of these two plants will very advantageously protect the boxes of ornamental plants from the burning contact of the solar rays. You need not contrive any other shelter for them.
